What is the proper way to create the tables for a SQLite database from a for-loop so that the table can be opened from other apps that use the database? I know how to run SQLite queries like CREATE TABLE, but for a table that is going to be used by multiple applications, how do you properly create the table in the database? I've done some Googling and found multiple options, but not sure if it's the best way to do things: Store the table creation and initial structure in a project file. See: How to create SQLite table from Android app Create table in android application Create table in an android app Android How to create a database in SQLite using java Android: How to create a table How do you create a database table Store the table creation in a file and manually fill it in with the data. See: Android: How to create database for sqllite How to Create SQLite Database on Android Add Object to SQLite Database in Android android sqllite create table dynamically I guess it depends on what you want to accomplish, but what is the proper way to handle this? Thanks for the help! A: You can also use the method onCreate in your database class to do this. Eg: public class DatabaseHelper extends SQLiteOpenHelper {
