Read Hamari Kitab Part 002 by Afzal Husain in Rehta Urdu Book Library. 15.1.3. Miracles of Afzal Afzal Hussein, on page 188, relates that one day, when he was traveling through the Tehran market, he asked a man: Do you have such and such a number? And he answered: "It's been three months now that people in Iran don't know what money is. The old days, unfortunately, are gone. And I have no money in cash, but I know the conditional numbers well. "In that case, I want you to make such and such a number for me." He replied: "Today it is impossible. But tomorrow I will compose for you, but it will cost twenty-five tarez of rice. Tomorrow I will do it. Three days later he spoke to the man again: Ask me today and it will be yours. He replied: "I can't. Then he said: You will receive it in seven days. The next day he sent for rice to this man and asked: "How?" He answered: "Tonight my friend brought milk for the children. I want to give him what he asked for, and if I tell him that this is his payment, he can come for my goods. He will not refuse milk, but I am against it. If he does not come, then I will not give him anything. That's it, when you need it, and the prices don't always stand up. When you have money, it is easy to pay with it. On another occasion, people gave him money, and he gave them so much that two women could hardly carry it all. So people sometimes, for no reason, raise the price, and therefore you have to hurry. As for me, numbers always help me out. If I have money in cash, when I leave the house, I always have a book in Pashto in my hands, and I keep it on my right side. I don't care if it's open or closed, I know I'm doing my things with numbers. If I go to buy rice, then in my right hand I hold a mesho
