Jet Set Radio (ジャックドリーム, Jētusupā Rawifjā?) is a sandbox action game developed and published by Underground and distributed by Konami Digital Entertainment, released on the PlayStation 2 in 2007. An expansion pack, Jet Set Radio Future (ジャックドリーム, Jētusupā Rawifjettikku?), was released on the PlayStation Portable on February 28, 2008. The original game has a total running length of eight hours. Jet Set Radio is set in various parts of the world with music being the only objective. The audience plays through the game in real time, listening to songs from numerous musicians in the style of The Rock Steady Crew and They Moved Mountains. The game rewards the player for listening to the right kind of music, by way of unlockable in-game items including songs and clothing. The player controls the player character, who must compete, race, and explore the vast environments while evading the authorities to get to the next destination. In the game, the player can also run, jump, slide, grind, climb walls, fly and perform air-brakes (if the player uses a jetbike). The Rock Steady Crew style music style is based on Run-D.M.C.'s "Whip It" with hints of Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust" and the MC Hammer song "U Can't Touch This". The Rock

Steady Crew, who produced "Rock Steady Crew Up Close and Personal," were featured in Jet Set Radio, appearing in the game as pilot characters. The game's soundtrack was also a collaboration among various artists, including Grandmaster Flash, A Guy Called Gerald, Busta Rhymes, Led Zeppelin, Gravity Kills, The Delfonics, Tom Tom Club, Sugar Ray, De La Soul, Devo, Johnny Rotten, Sham 69, The Stooges, It Dazzles, The Art of Noise, "Talkin' Loud and Sayin' Nothing", and DJ Shadow. History Originally titled Kizooloo, Jet Set Radio was developed and published by indie developer game developer Underground as a "classic-style action game" for the PlayStation 2. Underground originally came up with the concept for Jet Set Radio during the development of the Kasumi No Ken: Blazing Sword video game. The game was originally planned for only two playable
