Get to Know each Other” can be found HERE. It is one of a series of striking images of human inter-relationships that true-believers in the intimacy of a Diaspora-Israel relationship see as definitive proof of their faith.] There is a photograph taken in Israel that was shot primarily because it was the star of the morning news on the American broadcast television network. “The Beloved Community” is the stunning image of an Israeli and a Palestinian each holding the hand of a member of the other’s immediate family. Eyeballs jumping all over the globe, the photograph spread the “vision” of an ideal of Jewish-Palestinian co-existence under a single law, a single legal system and one nation. The image that called forth so much attention was a brilliant success of professional photography — by highly trained professionals. It was an image of a dream, one that the people of Israel and the Palestinian people have longed for, and one that the people of the world now gape at in awe, swallowing their yawns and wondering if this will happen. But when asked who the photographer was, people did not know. They assumed that it was a highly skilled professional. They saw the photograph as a stunning example of the romantic ideal of co-existence. Now it has come to light that Israel True, a human rights activist who co-founded Diaspora, is the person who shot the photograph. Israel True is also the founder of the New Israel Fund, a Jewish and American organization that, according to its web site, is dedicated to “creating opportunities for Israeli and Palestinian young leaders through a balanced perspective on Israel-Palestine and to making Jewish and Palestinian coexistence a reality.” But what is this balanced perspective about Israel and Palestine that True seeks to create? It begins with this startling declaration about Israel’s concerns: “What bothers me about the Israeli position on the conflict, I think, is that it’s extremely ethnocentric 595f342e71
