Drug addiction is a profound public health concern affecting millions of Americans in all age groups. A key question that arises is how and why young adolescent drug abusers differ from adults in brain organization of addiction. Adolescence is a critical period for normal development of the brain reward circuitry. In addition, there are marked developmental changes occurring in the striatum during adolescence, even prior to full maturation of brain regions associated with reward, motivation and addiction. These changes occur to promote reorganization of the brain reward circuit and to establish functional brain circuitry related to the control of behavior in context of maturation of brain regions controlling cognition, decision-making and social behavior. Adolescents are more likely to seek drugs that are rewarding at low doses, and use drugs more frequently and over longer periods of time. Recent research in animals has shown that adolescents are more sensitive to the rewarding effects of drugs than adults. Adolescence is also a critical period of drug initiation, and transition from experimentation to regular use. Research in animals suggests that drug-induced structural changes in the cortex and the hippocampus occur in the context of addiction and drug reward. Despite the importance of these findings, little is known about whether similar structural changes occur during adolescence in human brain regions related to reward, motivation, decision making and learning. We propose to conduct a longitudinal study of brain structure, using diffusion tensor imaging, to characterize the development of reward-related brain structures in adolescents who are experimenters and early and regular users of three classes of drugs (methamphetamine, alcohol and nicotine) prior to and during 4 years of active use. The objectives of the study are to determine whether there are brain structural and molecular changes associated with drug abuse during adolescence. The specific aims are to characterize changes in brain reward, motivation and decision making circuitry and in white matter tracts

Daikyojuku: Sexual Exploitation Eric's Mom The year was 1998. I was 13 years old. My younger sister had suddenly disappeared and Eric was telling the cops that she had been raped by some guys. My mother worked off-hours, so we all stayed home. We hadn't seen my sister for around two years. I knew that she was originally from rural Japan. She was seven when she lived here, and I remember my mother praising Japanese girls for being "soft" back then. Though I didn't get to know her well, she was the only girl who lived with us so I think that I knew her pretty well. I found out later that she was working in a karaoke bar when she first came to Tokyo and then as a hostess. Even though my mother didn't want to hear it, she told me that a lot of hostesses were taken advantage of. The clientele were after them. It was a very rough job back then. They worked in karaoke and group sex bars. They even had to dance. My mother found out later that my sister was taken to a police station to give a statement. At first, she refused to cooperate but she eventually did. Over the course of the next few months, we were constantly concerned about the safety of our smaller sister. She travelled a lot—in and out of Tokyo—with her friends, and we later found out she did drugs. In the meantime, my mother had begun secretly taking me to play girls' games and had been telling me about the girls she met and how they helped her get through the night. There were even clubs where we did those things. I didn't know if they were real clubs or game clubs. In recent years, clubs that claim to be amateur clubs have opened up. These clubs have government licenses. But there are many unsafe places as well. Like a lot of the girls and the S&M people here, I've been threatened by some people. When you're around 10, a lot of people become active and the police are actually interested in how many people they put in jail. In other words, the age of consent is around eight or ten. You can be arrested for various infractions. You can even be charged with rape. When we were teenagers, people wanted to jump through
