World's First 'Reality Cheque' Banks on New Home Blockchain to Save Lives in Tanzania World's First 'Reality Cheque' Banks on New Home Blockchain to Save Lives in Tanzania A new banking concept that incentivizes residents to make their homes safer by giving them a 'real life' cheque on their homes and cars has been launched in Tanzania A new banking concept that incentivizes residents to make their homes safer by giving them a 'real life' cheque on their homes and cars has been launched in Tanzania. The Tanzanian government is promoting a concept called 'Real Life Cheques', which is designed to encourage consumers to keep their homes and cars safe. The initiative is being backed by technology startup Blockdaemon, which has developed a blockchain-based smart contract technology that acts as a payment system and transfer of funds, while also incentivising users to make their buildings more secure. Significant savings in efforts to build a safer country The concept is being promoted in partnership with the City of Kitui, where safety tends to be a major problem. Around 90 deaths occur in the city every day. The 'Real Life Cheque' is being given to residents, offering them an incentive to keep their homes safe, saving the country thousands of dollars spent on building and upgrading homes. Last month, the Tanzanian government announced that the number of vehicles had gone up while the deaths on roads dropped in the country. According to June's statistics, the number of traffic accidents in the country rose for the first time in a decade with more than 170 people killed and 835 others injured. Meanwhile, the death toll dropped from 118 to 106. Changes in behavior are also being noticed. The number of collisions at intersections or roundabouts in Kitui dropped by 50%, and the number of accidents
