there are only a few movies over several years that make a lasting impression on the viewer. movies are created, launched, watched, and forgotten. however this seasons interstellar continues to grip audiences worldwide. the three-hour space odyssey piques the imagination and is arguably one of the most well written blockbuster movies in many years. an astronomer and physicist, the father of the theory of relativity, and a mathematician turn to adventure to save the earth from utter annihilation at the hands of mankind's most advanced technology. one of the great movie moments in recent memory comes with this film: the intense star wars vibes and the suspenseful, mind bending plot. i just finished this movie and for the sake of my soul and sanity, i only want to see it once. not that i wouldn't watch it a dozen times over, but just don't want to be awake while i watch it! its the story of a group of astronauts who set out in an attempt to find a planet that is suitable for human life. it is a pretty epic story and a very ambitious movie as well. some things, which are hard to believe, are portrayed to the audience. in one particular scene, the movie shows a planet in space, which is as big as the earth, or the moon. it is filled with water, and the whole planet is in the middle of a galactic storm. the earth itself is kind of a piece of information that the audience gets into the movie. its a very cool concept. "the first trailer of interstellar. the first official trailer of interstellar. it comes from the movie which is about to be launched. it's a story set in a vast universe. a story of a father and his relationship with his children and how humanity deals with an impending disaster." 5ec8ef588b
