David com Superficies Negras Sb [49] but in some cases the QoL may decline even with very good status of disease. This may be due to the fact that the QoL depends not only on the patient's health status but also the psychological and social aspects of the disease and its treatment which are not considered in the current study. The one-month prevalence of depression (using Beck Depression Inventory) found in the study conducted by Badholz and colleagues [35] may, at the same time, explain the difference in the depression prevalence between the two studies (3.9% versus 4.2% in our study). On the other hand, the better QoL was associated with less anxiety and less depression in patients with a higher socioeconomic status in general [50]. The results of our study indicate that the Polish adaptation of EORTC QLQ-C30 and EORTC QLQ-CR38 for patients with breast cancer is not suitable for use among the Polish population. After the standardization, the Polish version of the EORTC QLQ-C30 and EORTC QLQ-CR38 have been recommended to be used for the evaluation of patients with breast cancer in Poland. It is the first trial comparing the original version with the Polish adaptation. The availability of the Polish version of the QoL questionnaires may help to improve the quality of the treatment of patients with breast cancer and their survivors in Poland. We thank all the participants of the study, who were willing to take part in the project.
