Horse ID = 1 to 20; the results were very similar if the cells with ID $1,3,6,7,15$ and 16 were excluded (data not shown). The cells from the three horses with a very high residual jetlag (with ID 2,11 and 18) were excluded from the analysis, because for horses with large residual jetlag, the distribution is highly right skewed. The differences in mean cell numbers between cells from the jetlag and control groups were tested with an independent ${ }^{*}$ *-test. The association between the two groups (jetlag and controls) and the cell number were tested using linear regression (PROC MIXED) with horse ID as a random factor and residual jetlag as a covariate. In addition, the effect of a high-dose ( $500 \mu \mathrm{~g}$ ) injection of flunixin at 4 h before the blood sampling (the time of blood sampling was estimated to be around 38 h after first feeding, based on the gut temperature data) was examined. We compared cells (proportions) from the time of sampling after flunixin injection (around 40 h after first feeding) and from the control sample (around 60 h after first feeding). A linear mixed effects model (PROC MIXED) was used to examine the differences between the control and experimental group at each time point, taking into account the repeated measurements per horse. Horse ID and time after flunixin were added as random and fixed effects, respectively. The data were transformed using the LN (Log~10~) as the transformation using the lognormal function was of no use because the distribution was not normal. The results are presented as mean $\pm$ SEM. The association between the jetlag group and the control group was tested with a chi-square test. The association between the two groups and the cell number was tested using a Kruskal
