Apple's newest smartphone takes cues from the iPhone X and features exciting new camera technology.

With its 6.1-inch OLED display and water resistance, the iPhone X has more of an iWatch feel than its predecessors. It also comes with facial recognition technology and weather-related notifications.

The new camera features include improved depth-of-field, expanded focus modes and new camera controls. Photos are now taken three seconds faster than the iPhone 8 Plus.

Plus, the new phone and its camera are compatible with the existing iPhone X camera plug, so you can still take photos with an iPhone 6s Plus, iPhone 7 Plus, and iPhone 8 Plus. In the iPhone X's new dedicated 'Reminders' app, incoming reminders come in the form of persistent notifications. You can swipe on the top of the home screen to access the new app.

This becomes especially important when taking photos. If your iPhone is ready to go, you can view your photos, meaning you can still take photos without the phone's display being covered with a message asking you to switch over to the camera if you'd like.

You can also add an attention motion to your photos using a new Animoji feature. By pressing down on the face sensors, you can wave your hand above your phone to animate a smiley face.

This feature is exclusive to iPhone X and there's no third-party app to do this. However, the feature is easy to pull off, and if the iPhone X becomes your default smartphone, it could become a new favorite feature of yours.
